Their mother, Debra, said they play and fight like any other brother and sister, but the bond between them strengthened at dinner time one Friday night when their aunt, Rose Corrao, was baby-sitting them at her home in New London.

As "Aunt Rosie," tells it, one of the candies she gave Zachary — Hershey Tootsie Roll butterscotch, she said — found its way to Meghan, who was drinking a glass of water.

Zachary said he reacted when he realized his sister couldn't breathe. He learned the Heimlich maneuver from watching a television show, "Thomas and His," on Fox Family TV. He doesn't like the show, but Meghan does.

"I'm proud of him," Meghan said.

Zachary considers the incident no big deal, but he's the only one who does.
